**Guardianship means the rights and duties of parents in respect of the upbringing of their children. The natural mother of a child is automatically a guardian of the child. The married mother and father of a child are the most common guardians. Whether the father of a child is an automatic guardian depends on his relationship with the mother. If the mother agrees to the father becoming a guardian both parents must complete a statutory declaration in the presence of a Peace Commissioner or a Commissioner for Oaths or a Notary Public. An unmarried father is automatically a guardian if he has lived with the child's mother for 12 consecutive months after 18th January 2016, including at least three months with the mother and child following the child's birth. If there is disagreement as to whether or not the father has been cohabitating for the required length of time, an application for the necessary declaration can be made to the court. If the mother does not agree to the father becoming the child's guardian, then the father can apply to the court to be appointed as a joint guardian. This is possible, whether or not his name is on the child's birth certificate.

A step-parent, a civil partner or a person who has cohabited with a parent for not less than three years may apply to the court to become a guardian where they have co-parented the child for more than two years. A person who has provided for the child's day-to-day care for a continuous period of more than a year may apply for guardianship if the child has no parent or guardian who is willing or able to exercise the rights and responsibilities of guardianship.
